

High Volume vs. Low Volume Firms

There are two basic kinds of personal injury law firms: those that do lots of low-value cases, and those that do just a few high-value cases. Shulman DuBois LLC is strictly the latter kind of firm: we limit the number of cases we take, so that we can spend lots of time on the cases we do take.

We have strong opinions about the difference in quality between high-volume and low-volume firms. To be sure, there is a place and a function for both, and we don't dispute that someone might have valid reasons for choosing a high-volume firm. We do believe that when lawyers take on so many cases that they cannot remember the names of their clients, the quality of legal assistance suffers.

Our commitment to quality means that we turn down far more cases than we accept. But it also means that if we do take your case, we guarantee that your case will get the time and attention it deserves; that your voice will be heard and that your needs will be met. We enjoy working that way, and we believe that it gets better results for you.
