

The Automatic Stay by Bankruptcy Man!

Yesterday I received an invitation to connect with Steven Horowitz on LinkedIn. His invitation to connect was unassuming, "I publish the Bankruptcy Bill and BAPCPA Man cartoons and thought it might make sense to link up." I am open to build my professional network via LinkedIn and you may connect with me directly here. As I surfed through several groups I belong to on the website, I came across his blog, BankruptcyBill.

Considering the negative stigma around bankruptcy law and in light of our nation's economic woes, these cartoons are a refreshing departure. They're easy to read and understand. They take the law and break it down into layman's terms; a gift I rather admire. In BAPCPA MAN #2, he discusses the automatic stay as a force field that protects the debtor from their creditors. The cartoon is a fun explanation of the law and below the cartoon itself, are links that provide the reader with additional information on the topic discussed.

It's genius! The blog also provides links to other bankruptcy lawyer blogs and the authors even write Haikus. You're invited to add your own in the comments section of the website. What is a Haiku? Here is my version of a bankruptcy haiku:

I love bankruptcy. It will get you a fresh start. A bright future now.

I am a fan of creativity. I encourage you to check out the blog. My only suggestion is that it should be published on LexBlog's platform; I'm biased that way.
