Actor Chris Tucker in Trouble with IRS

Chris Tucker, famous for his role as James Carter alongside Jackie Chan in the Rush Hour movies is in trouble with the IRS for allegedly failing to pay his taxes in 2001-2002, 2004-2006 amounting to $11.5 million. As such, at the end of last month, the IRS filed a Notice of Federal Tax Liens at the L.A. County Recorder's Office against the actor/comedian.

This Notice of Federal Tax Lien is a legal claim on the property of an individual in order to pay for a tax debt. It applies to all property or rights to property that that individual has or acquires and gives the IRS priority of claim on these properties over other creditors. It is also filed in state recording offices to make the tax liability public.

The 37 year old actor owns a 9,000 square foot home in Florida which he purchased for $6 million in 2007 and is reportedly in the market to short sell at a loss of $4 million in order to raise some quick cash to pay his tax debts. Tucker also owns property in California, a 6,000 square foot mansion in the prestigious Mulholland Park Community which was also slapped with a lien by the California state government to recover $3.5 million in state taxes in 2009.

It is said that Tucker earned between $20-$25 million for each of the three 'Rush Hour' movies he starred in.

Other celebrities of the silver screen and music scene have not escaped the IRS net for their tax delinquencies. In 2006, the court indicted actor Wesley Snipes of 8 counts to defraud the IRS and making false tax claims. These claims were for tax refunds to which he was not entitled in 1996 and 1997 and the fraud charges were for giving frivolous reasons for not filing his tax returns between 1999 and 2004. Although Snipes was later acquitted of the felony conspiracy and fraud charges, he was found guilty of three counts of failure to file his tax returns for the years 1999 to 2001. The actor was sentenced to three years in prison in 2008.

Although he appealed his sentence, supported by fellow actors Denzel Washington and Woody Harrelson, an appellate court in Atlanta did not grant it.

Other celebrities who have been in trouble with the IRS over the years include Brooke Shields, Toni Braxton, celebrity chef Gordon Ramsey, Prince, Snoop Dog, Pamela Anderson and Shannen Doherty.
