

How to give your business a Legal Check-up?

By: Elliott Stapleton, Esq.

Why is this important?

When a person has a medical need, there are symptoms which physically manifest as a warning. There are also preventative check-ups which are used to limit future risks.

When businesses have a legal need, it can be hard to recognize the symptoms or circumstances where preemptive action is necessary. When a legal problem does present itself, the cure is always more costly and time consuming than prevention.

How does a business owner know what legal questions he or she should be asking?

Business owners focus their work on maintaining a profitable and sustainable company. In this pursuit, legal well-being plays a vital role but can be overwhelming when the issues are unknown.

To address this universal business problem, I have created a concise (one page) Legal Check-up. This Check-up is written specifically for small business owners to do a self-exam. The Check-up will provide insight into the company's current legal well-being and a road-map for action on future legal needs.
