

Going After a Big Company for a Wrongful Death

Sometimes, the party that will be responsible for you losing a loved one will happen to be a very large company. This may happen because of a defective product, a dangerous drug or for another reason. Trucking companies are frequently the targets of wrongful death lawsuits. Don't let the size of the company intimidate you out of taking action. Here are some things to remember about these lawsuits.

The Truth is what Matters

No matter how big a company is, they are still subject to the same laws that everyone else is. This means that you shouldn't take into account that a company may be very large when you're considering filing a legal action against them. If they wronged you in a way that led to the untimely death of a loved one, you have every right to go after them for it in court.

Undisclosed Risks

Products that have risks that are not disclosed by the company that manufactures or markets them are frequently the reasons that people file these lawsuits. When you're not informed of the side effects of a drug, the risks a certain product presents or other hazards, you cannot make an informed decision and you have the right to make an informed decision when you buy or use a product. Remember that the company cannot get off the hook simply because they are very large and powerful.

Settlements

If you're offered a settlement by a company that you're considering filing a lawsuit against, remember that the settlement may have been arrived at by the company because they believe it's the very least amount of money that you'll be satisfied with. They may not actually be trying to make the situation right. Quite the opposite, in fact, may be the case. Be sure you speak with an attorney before you accept any such settlement.

Talk to an attorney if you want to file a wrongful death action against a company. The attorney will not be intimidated by the size of the company and they'll be more than willing to go after them if you have a good claim. Remember that you can get top-notch legal representation without having to pay upfront fees for it. You can work with an attorney on a contingency basis, which means that you do not have to pay them unless they actually manage to win your claim and get you compensation for the wrongful death.
