NEW YORK, NEW YORK – Police and New York civil rights violation lawyers at the Perecman Firm are investigating a possible hate crime near Walter Ward School in Howard Beach, New York. The investigation was launched after a noose was found hanging from a tree outside a Queens, New York apartment building.

Unfortunately, Howard Beach has a history of racial intolerance says New York civil rights violation lawyer David Perecman. Hate crimes are a civil rights violation in New York.

“Hate crimes intended to hurt and intimidate someone because of their race, ethnicity, or other trait are inexcusable anywhere, especially in New York,” civil rights violation lawyer Perecman said. “We celebrate diversity in this great city. Hate crimes also make a community look bad.”

According to School officials, students did not see evidence of the hate crime. Students were indoors at the time of the hate crime incident due to the inclement weather.

Symbols of hatred fuel an atmosphere of intolerance and anger that can endanger lives and make minorities feel unsafe.

According to New York’s WCBS2, New York police quickly took the noose down after surrounding the tree.

Police are testing the noose for DNA and fingerprints, and the NYPD Hate Crimes Task Force is investigating the incident as a bias attack, a police source said. New York civil rights violation lawyers at The Perecman Firm are following this case.

The motive for the noose is being still unknown, but it is believed to be connected to a recent incident in the area when a worker for CitySolve Systems Inc., a company used to clean graffiti in the area, was confronted by a group of teens while he was painting over tags in the neighborhood.

According to company owner, the worker called him the next day and said he was able to complete his jobs in the area, but was harassed by kids who used racial slurs and told him to leave the Howard Beach area.

The noose, a hate crime symbol, was found close to the location of the earlier New York hate crime incident.

Other hate crimes in New York City have occurred in recent months as well.
