

MAY 11, 2011

DEPOSITION IN LOS ANGELES – WHERE DO I PARK?

As a court reporter, I find myself driving to Los Angeles to report depositions, and one of the most stressful parts of going to Los Angeles to work is finding a parking spot and/or figuring out how to access the parking garage in a building. Many an early morning I have found myself circling buildings, wishing I could go the wrong way on a one-way street, because I can see the ENTRANCE sign, but I can't seem to access that particular driveway. I hate driving around an unfamiliar area with people behind me wishing I would get out of the way straining my neck trying to find building numbers and driveways.

Well, voila! I found a website that has all of the answers and even calculates how much it is going to cost to park in any particular lot or building. www.bestparking.com (or for their free app www.bestparking.com/mobile . Not only does this website tell you where to park in Los Angeles, but 17 other cities, including New York City, Philadelphia, and Boston. As a freelance court reporter or legal videographer, this is invaluable information. No one needs to be stressed out before getting to a job because of something as lame as finding a place to park. I give three thumbs up to the BestParking company.

