On Tuesday we added a post about common divorce risks, according to a US News and World Report article. We got through only 2 of the 5 risk factors included in the article, which were lack of support and salary and career differences. The following are the remaining reported marriage breakers:

3.) Illness

The promise of "through sickness and health" is beautiful, but not all relationships can withstand the stress or changes that occur when a spouse gets seriously sick. When some spouses are hit with the reality of that promise, they realize that the unconditional care that a marriage requires is just too much to handle. They married a healthy person and do not want to alter their lifestyles in the necessary ways to nurture their partners.

4.) Drug & alcohol dependence

When someone is an addict, their addiction is their primary concern. A healthy marriage needs both spouses to consider their spouse and family as their primary concern. Addiction makes that difficult and therefore leads to divorce in many cases. The money that is spent to support addiction along with concern for children living with an addict are also common causes for divorcing an addict.

5.) Married too young

When couples have been together since high school a nagging feeling can interrupt the happiness in their marriage. A high-school romance that leads to eternal love is a romantic thought, but in reality, many couples who married at a young age are plagued with feelings of "What if?" and "What else is out there?" Those thoughts load a marriage with doubts that commonly lead to divorce.
